

Tuesday Evening

My Dear Friend:

Having taken it for granted, that the extraordinary violence of the storm would prevent the gathering of any number of friends at the Bazaar this evening, and having, therefore, made no preparation to speak to edification, I beg to throw myself upon the indulgence of such as may be present, and to be excused for non-attendance, especially in view of the lateness of the hour, and of a night's editorial labor before me. It is scarcely possible that any thing could fall from my lips, calculated either to enlighten or encourage those who are so well-read and
